BRICK WORK STARTED ON GOULD BUILDING

The work of laying brick was started Monday on the side of the new Administration Building next to the Household Arts Cottage. The foundation at the front of the building is nearly all poured. Piles of sand and gravel and brick are on the grounds and the steel work is being unloaded.

Some of the brick are coming from the yards of the Morin Brick Co., Danville Junction, and the Gagnon Brick Co., South Yarmouth.

VARIETY SHOWER GIVEN MISS KATHRYN HANSCOM

On Tuesday evening of this week twenty-five ladies from Bethel drove to Mechanic Falls and gave a variety shower to Miss Kathryn Hanscom at the home of her parents.

The event was planned by Mrs. G. L. Thurston and Mrs. Amos Fortier in honor of Miss Hanscom's approaching marriage to Carroll P. Bailey.

When the bride-to-be arrived from Lewiston with Miss Ella K. Litchfield and Mrs. Stanley F. Bartlett as supper guests with the family, she was taken completely by surprise. As the car came to a stop in the yard it was surrounded by friends singing an original song.

After greetings a buffet supper was served on the lawn. Clues for a treasure trail led, after devious windings about the beautiful grounds, to a large pirate's chest concealed in a grove of pines. Miss Hanscom opened the chest and contents surrounded by delighted friends and relatives. Many lovely and useful gifts of pewter, linen glass and pottery were revealed.

The pleasant occasion concluded with a tour of the gardens and the house.

STEARNS—FARWELL

The many friends of Adelmar J. Stearns and Mrs. Ruth Farwell are extending felicitations on their marriage. The ceremony took place on August 6th at the parsonage of the First Congregational Church in Gorham, N. H., Dr. William Sinclair officiating.

The bride was becomingly gowned in blue organdy with hat to match. Mr. and Mrs. William Spinney, life-long friends of the groom, accompanied them.

Mrs. Stearns is well known and has a large circle of acquaintances and friends in this town. She is prominent in Farm Bureau activities and a popular leader in the 4-H Club.

Mr. Stearns has the good-will and respect of Bethel people. For many years he has been a reliable and expert employee of the Stowell-MacGregor Corp., dower manufacturers. At present he is employed in the South Lincoln mill of this company and he and Mrs. Stearns have gone there. In early fall they expect to return to Bethel and occupy their home on Church Street.

RIVERSIDE PARK LEASED FOR HOLIDAY, SEPT. 4

Card of Model T, Motorcycle and Bicycle Races, and Ball Game Planned for Labor Day

The Riverside Park Track will be the scene of another race meet of Model T's, motorcycles, and bicycles on Labor Day, Sept. 4th. This was assured Tuesday by the formal signing of a lease for that day by Mr. Boyker to Gordon E. Lathrop of Bethel. A baseball game of more than a little interest will be one of the features of the afternoon. The Benedicts and Collegians will meet in a third and "rubber" game of a series. Each has won one game; the Collegians the first, 18-4; and the Benedicts the second, 12-10.

One of the provisions of the lease is that only vehicles entering the races will be allowed on the track for eight days before Sept. 4. This was deemed necessary because some local persons, who evidently believe the track public property, go on with private trucks and cars and rip up the surface of the track.

By virtue of the lease Mr. Lathrop may and will prosecute any trespassers on the track from Aug. 28 until after the races.

SECOND ANNUAL OUTING OXFORD COUNTY COUNCIL

The second annual field day of the Oxford County Council, American Legion, was held at Locke Mills, Sunday. The outing was largely attended, there being about 200 present. A box lunch was enjoyed at noon.

Moore; time race won by Mr. Currier and Mrs. Stanley Anderson; 50 yd. dash for boys won by Harold Young; 50 yd. dash for small girls, Helen Snow; 50 yd. dash for girls, Miss Snow; wheelbarrow race won by Francis Carroll and Maurice Prince; men's swimming race won by Francis Carroll; second Gene Van; third, Mr. Wright; ladies swimming race won by Mrs. Francis Carroll. Mrs. Harold Lurvey was disqualified for swimming under water.

The ball game between the East and West sides of the county was won by the East side, 15 to 13. Batteries for the East side, Holman and Foster; for the West side, Lurvey and Snow, Burgess and Howe.

The prize for the longest hit of the day went to Win Howe, and he also received the prize for the best all around playing. Second prize for the latter went to Everett Foster.

Prizes for the various events were donated by the retail merchants of Bethel and Dixfield.

Merchants from Bethel contributing prizes were: W. E. Bosserman, Bryant's Market, Allen Shoe Store, M. A. Nafney, L. W. Russell, Allen's Market, Edward P. Lyon, Bean & Fox, Ceylon Rowe & Son, Dave's Fruit Store, J. P. Butts, and Grover Brooks; from Dixfield, Guy Gardner, Howard Clothing Co., and A. M. Stanley.

BENEDICTS TO PLAY AT LOCKE MILLS SUNDAY

On next Sunday, August 13, at 2:00 P. M. the Benedicts take on the fast stepping Locke Mills outfit in a baseball game at Locke Mills. A real game is promised to local fans at this time. Dr. Wilson is pitching great ball and the boys seem to have their eye on the old apple. Barring too many errors the Benedicts ought to take Locke Mills into camp.

BENEDICTS LOSE TO SOUTH RUMFORD 14-13

Garner 20 Hits in 11 Innings But Many Errors Lose Game

Last Sunday the Benedicts traveled to South Rumford where they met defeat, 14-13, in an eleven inning thriller. The Benedicts out-slugged the Southies 20 to 10 hits but their eleven costly errors against four for South Rumford more than offset their hitting. The hitting of Wilson and Hood and the pitching of Wilson featured the Benedicts' attack while the pitching of Monteith and the hitting of Viger were the bright lights for the South Rumfords. Bob Littlehale made a spectacular stop of a hot liner and put out the hitter at first.

OLD SPEC TRAIL CLOSED WEEK DAYS

The trail up Old Spec is now closed by the Forestry Department all days except Sunday. People who undertake the climb on any other day are doing so at their own risk. One or two narrow escapes from being struck by logs and fear of more which might not be escapes have caused authorities to investigate. The danger is reckoned as too great to allow further chance of serious accidents.

There were 77 visitors last week twenty of whom chose Sunday and chose wisely. It was a very favorable day to see distant peaks and lakes. If there are some who still wish to know more of the view from Old Spec than they have read in The Citizen they are welcome every Sunday. No questions will be answered on any other day.

WITH THE POETS

To Our Readers—If there is an old song or poem which you cannot find and would like to see in print, write the Citizen. If we are unable to locate it possibly another reader can furnish it for publication.

THE MASTER OF THE HOUSE

John Dennis

He can not walk, he can not speak;
Nothing he knows of books and men;
He is the weakest of the weak,
And has not strength to hold a pen;
He has no pockets and no purse,
Nor ever yet has owned a penny,
But has more riches than his nurse,
Because he wants not any.

He rules his parents by a cry,
And holds them captive by a smile,
A despot strong through infancy,
A king through lack of guile,
He lies upon his back and crows,
Or looks with grave eyes on his mother,
What can he mean? But I suppose
They understand each other.

Indoors or out, early or late,
There is no limit to his sway;
For, wand in baby robes of state,
He governs night and day,
Kisses he takes as rightful due,
And, Turk-like, has his slaves to dress him;
His subjects bend before him, too;
I'm one of them.—God bless him!

NEVER TROUBLE TROUBLE

St. Clair Adams

I used to hear a saying
That had a deal of pith;
I gave a cheerful spirit
To face existence with.
Especially when matters
Seemed doomed to go askew,
I'd say "Never trouble trouble
Till trouble troubles you."

Not woe at hand, those comings
Are harder to resist;
We hear them stalk like giants,
We see them through a mist,
But big things in the brewing
Are small things in the brew;
So never trouble trouble
Till trouble troubles you.

Just look at things through glasses
That show the evidence,
One lens of them is courage,
The other common sense.
They'll make it clear, my friends,
Are just a bugaboo;
No more you'll trouble trouble
Till trouble troubles you.

RETROSPECTION

(A reply to Kipling's "If")

Henry W. LaPierre

If Kipling, when he wrote his famous poem,
Had suffered half of what I have gone through;
If triumph never set his features glowing,
Or if disaster never made him blue;

If he had about and hated, he had liked it
And praised the stars for their pleasant ways;
If fate had curbed his genius and had spoked it,
Instead of lending fame's most wondrous rays;

If weakness were a crime in every human,
And not a portion of that love divine;
If love and hate are strangers to the true man—
Then tell me, please, where is the true man's shrine?

If I thus could be free from human errors,
And laugh at fate for each recurring prod;
Then, dearest friend, the world would have no terrors,
For I should not be human—I'd be God.

TWO-MINUTE SERMON

(By REV. GEORGE HENRY)

CONSISTENCY

A professor is a failure unless he is a professor. A preacher who is not a practitioner is anathema. "He that saith, I know him and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar and the truth is not in him." (1 Jno. 2:4). Be consistent. If you wear the name "Christian" be as Christlike as is humanly possible. He is our example; our high ideal. So live that "men will see your good works and glorify God." If you have vowed allegiance to God, keep his commandments. The cause suffers most in the house of his friends. A foul-mouthed, blatant infidel is harmless compared with a hypocrite. A deacon who don't "deak" is a hyatus in a hole, but if he is deliberately sinful he is a cancer on the body to which he belongs.

Paris Gave American

Artist Belated Honor

The portrait of Whistler's "Mother" was hung in the Louvre in 1922. It is the first picture by an American artist to hang in the great French gallery.

In 1891 Whistler was induced by Georges Clemenceau to sell the canvas to the French government. It was then placed in the Musee du Luxembourg, that gallery having been for many years the chief repository of the government's purchases in contemporary art. It is a rule that a picture must remain there at least ten years after the death of the artist. Then, if the authorities choose it may enter the sacred portals of the Louvre.

Whistler parted with the painting only on the condition that it was to find a permanent place in the Louvre after the required lapse of time. He received 160,000 francs for it, which up to that time was the highest price the French government had ever paid for a contemporary painting. In addition he was given the Legion of Honor. Whistler died in 1903.

In the summer of 1922 the painting was stored along with the others of the Pele de France, in the cellar of the Luxembourg to make room for a Rumanian exhibition. In May, 1922, a place was made for the celebrated portrait in the Louvre itself, a belated fulfillment of the French government's agreement with the artist.

A STEP FORWARD

The Bethel merchants have made a distinct step forward in forming an organization known as the Merchants Association of Bethel. It has long been needed and it carried forward as it should be will be of benefit to both the merchants and their customers. While probably the movement was prompted by the desire for shorter working hours and the sentiment in favor of the National Recovery Act seemed to make this an opportune time for the move, and despite the fact that the spirit of the Recovery Act is in no way romped with inasmuch an extra help will not be employed, the fact that a group of men can band together is significant after over 20 years without much semblance of cooperation.

Business places thus grouped should be in a position to render better service to their patrons.
These patrons are almost without exception readers of the Citizen.
These Bethel business men, regardless of their willingness to work together for their mutual advantages, must realize that unless they strive to do still more for the benefit of the public they cannot succeed.

We understand that some 15 concerns are banded in this Association. Of this number three are represented in the Citizen's display advertising columns this week. In fairness to their customers our local stores should tell of their offerings in their local newspaper.
In fairness to our local stores we should "trade at home" with the merchant who carries a stock of goods for our convenience and who has local interests at heart. And in fairness to their home town newspaper both should look upon the paper as a means of distributing valuable news about the stores' offerings as well as a large amount of local and county news each week.

By friendly cooperation better stores, a better town, and a better newspaper will be possible.

THE OTHER HALF

Many automobile drivers who think they know all about the right-of-way law understand only the half of it. In answer to the question, "Who has the right-of-way?" the average driver would quickly reply, "The man on the right." The answer is partially correct but isn't complete.

The best statutes on the subject say, "The car on the right has the right-of-way provided it enters the intersection first, but if the car on the left happens to be first into the intersection, the car on the right must yield."

Maxwell Halsey, Traffic Engineer of the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters, says the best way to eliminate confusion on this point is for all cars to slow down when approaching intersections. "In this way drivers will be able to gauge each other's distance and obey the law with greater convenience.

"The driver of a car approaching from the right has no justification to suppose that all traffic must stop to permit him to cross. This attitude has produced a high toll of accidents. More than twice as many accidents occur at intersections as between intersections. Last year, 2,430 persons were killed and 184,750 injured in 146,500 accidents resulting from misunderstandings over the right-of-way."

State laws should be clarified in order to coincide with common sense and the free flow of traffic.
If this is done, another bad hazard will be eliminated. Meanwhile, motorists, slow down at intersections.

During the first six months of 1933, there were produced in Maine 10,462,632 pairs of shoes, an increase of 11.3% over the corresponding period last year.

To anyone asserting the evident sobriety of our State and the comparative lack of evidence of the effects of the use of alcoholic drink we often hear the answer, "You can find liquor anywhere if you look for it." Well. If the law of Prohibition is changed to one of Permission, you will not have to look for it, it will look for you for your children, for your neighbors, and for your neighbor's children. It will meet the laborer on his way to his work, sit down with him at his lunch and dip its hand into his dinner pail, join him on the way to his home, lead him into the nearby saloon, handle his money, fuddle his brain, and brutalize his instincts. Then the home will dread his coming. Then money will be lacking for rent, groceries, and children's shoes. Then, when the painted and bejewelled denizens of the palaces of the rich stimulate their jaded brains with the wine when it is red, the pale faces of the poor will be branded with tragedy and despair.

The liquor interests have never obeyed any law of restriction or decency. This was one of the things that brought on Prohibition. Their fight will not stop until all restrictions, one after another, have been removed. Their propaganda will not cease until their goal has been reached. With habit as their stronghold they will push their business until every adult is their patron and every youth started for their doors.

Conditions are not satisfactory about many things, and they never will be as long as human nature is what it is and government is cowardly, feeble, and corrupt, as it is in many places. But they will not be improved by more booze and by strengthening the liquor interests with laws in their favor.

PETER, or as everybody called him, Pete, was big and square shouldered with that kind of red hair that seems always to have been ruffled by a stiff breeze. He was stubborn and pugnacious when there was anything to be stubborn and pugnacious about, but usually he was easy going and gentle.

Pete was as putty in the hands of Daphne Baker, but no one but he knew it. Daphne was so fragile that he thought she must have stepped from a Watteau canvas.

Sometimes Daphne treated Pete with all the sweetness in the world and sometimes she seemed to regard him as just a big, solid doormat. Pete absorbed her kindnesses and forgot the rest.

Nobody but Peter knew that just outside the city limits on a sunny hill there sprawled a bungalow, with wide lawns and flower garden and a fountain playing against the distance of great trees. He pictured Daphne there, and, of course, himself somewhere close by. Daphne had heaps of flirtations. What pretty girl has not? But all ways she drifted back to Pete.

He had not worried much about these affairs until the advent, on the screen of the handsome, soulful-eyed Geoffrey Collins. Daphne simply went wild about him.

During the fascinated days Daphne looked at Pete's unruly red hair and his big, useful hands, and his broad grin with comparisons in her mind that he had been well for Pete. When Pete took her across a crowded street, he would look her arm in his own hand, guide her swiftly and surely to where he wanted to take her and then let her go. Now Geoffrey, on the screen, of course, would look questionably and most unlovely into the eyes of his lady, take her arm gently and wait most gracefully for the traffic to clear before risking his own and his lady's life.

And invariably when Pete took her to dinner he did it in the ordering. He made her eat a nice steak, some fine vegetables and a good pudding.

"No," he declared at her protestations. "Girls require more than hearts of lettuce and sandwiches for dinner. You eat that—all of it!" And Daphne did.

On the other hand, Geoffrey would have toyed daintily with tid-bits that might have satisfied a Persian kitten.

So, when the great announcement came that there was to be a combined society and movie garden party for the benefit of the unemployed, and that Geoffrey was to dance with all and sundry, Daphne knew that the great moments of her life were approaching. But just to make sure, she got herself appointed to the refreshments committee. It was to be a tremendous affair and the whole of the city would flock to see the favorites of the screen in varied forms of charitable performances.

"No," declared Pete, adamant in his decision. "I'd rather go fishing than doll up on a hot day like this. You put on your best frock, look your prettiest and have a dozen or so dances with the great Geoffrey." He knew Daphne was annoyed, but he wanted to give her free rein. In his heart Pete feared for the first time, for Geoffrey seemed like a man of real charm. Pete felt that his castle of dreams might tumble that day, and he went off to fish, far up the river.

Daphne was exquisite in a silvery gown, of a dress, and a wide drapery that shadowed the deep violet of her eyes. No wonder that Geoffrey gloried in his partner when it came to Daphne's turn to dance with him. Daphne's heart had pounded when she stepped forward to meet him, but no matter were they on the floor actually dancing than she became her normal, level-headed self.

Geoffrey was delightful. He was a wonderful dancer. He gazed soulfully and respectfully into her eyes but there was the faintest bit of make-up beneath his eyes and a becoming hint of sunburn that the sun had not produced on his face. Daphne smiled softly as she finished her dance with him, then fled swiftly from the garden party. She didn't take time to change her clothes but hurried to her little roadster and drove recklessly far beyond the city limits. Then, parking her car, she walked quickly along the river bank to a tiny grove of trees with some great rocks that lay out on the river. Pete sat there fishing, but even if a whale had been on his line, there would have been no joy in it. For Pete was seeing Daphne in the arms of Geoffrey Collins.

"Peter—dear!" Daphne hurried herself into Pete's arms. There wasn't a soul in the world in sight and her white, silky arms went up clingingly about Pete's neck and she lifted her lips to be kissed.

The fishing rod floated down the river while Daphne gloried in Pete's strong arms, his ruffled hair and his rugged face with its broad grin. Pete knew his voice would tremble if he spoke, so he only tightened his grip and visualized the bungalow on the sunny hill.

NORMA KNIGHT

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Business taking him to Denver, Geoffrey Ensloe, young engineer, takes up his residence with his mother's girlhood friends. They seem a happy, carefree group. Captain Cary, Miss Nona Ensloe, the captain's daughter; Cary, thoughtless though likable; Little Tenny Montague, a girl who lives with the Ensloes and Cynthia.

CHAPTER II.—Geoff finds himself much "at home," though Cynthia puzzles him. She is, apparently, just the wife of her family, living a "gift shop," and astounds Geoff by the suggestion that she board money, to her, unknown to her mother. He agrees, though much mystified.

CHAPTER III.—Cary's specialty is to be securing and losing jobs, and with financial extravagance. Cynthia openly resents. Geoff is prejudiced against the girl for her seeming carelessness.

CHAPTER IV.—A talk with Cynthia, assistant at the gift shop, the "Ends," sets Geoff wondering about the financial condition of the Ensloe family.

Cynthia had been six days at the hospital; never dangerously ill but for the most part in a semicomatose, the result of exhaustion. She had been the six most strenuous days Geoff had ever known. By exercise of mere brain power he had known he possessed, he the household expenses within budget.

He had never dreamed that keeping house was so complicated a matter. It had seemed simple enough when he learned from the shop contributed to expenses at home. He figured on a monthly basis. A hundred dollars from the shop, the mother-in-law on keeping in the house, and an emergency fund, and she was still paying on the house, sixty dollars for his board, and he wondered if he had increased that pitifully small sum, but decided it would be playing fair with Cynthia; five from Tenny's father; hundred and eighty-five dollars. Surely an adequate sum for maintenance of six persons.

He had it all down in neat columns: food, so much; telephone, so much; clothing, so much; heat, light, drugs, so much. He regarded pride his model budget and showed it to Cynthia. It was like every other household budget, it began to develop leaks, and not taken into account such bills as the cost of the newspaper, dry cleaning for Cary and Nona, a plumber's bill for a broken pipe, breaking in the house.

It became an obsession. It would have been simple enough, of course, to meet all his out of his own pocket; but show Geoff's pride wouldn't admit that. Cynthia made him promise to pay the household expenses of her own money. Then, too, she told him that if a girl could do this problem and run a household, surely he, whose powers were considered exceptional in his own profession, ought to be able to do it.

He glanced again at his budget and found that Cary was paying board. How come young Mr. Cary wasn't looking over like rest of them? Geoff determined to get out without loss of time, and in his bedroom, while cheerily as he dressed for an engagement.

He was dressed with preliminaries. Here, Cary, you're not paying. I see. Guess I'll have to pay a little. I'm paying you a little. You put in—say forty? How much your salary is—say you mean," said Cary.

Geoff's expression was one of actual horror. "Lost your job?" he shouted. Cary nodded. "Fact is, old chap, I was about to ask you if you'd advance me a hundred. You see I—"

"Nothing doing!" said Geoff bitterly. "Why—the boy's jaw sagged—I thought you had plenty of money! I thought you were—"

"Think some more—and try to get any of it, if I have!" It seemed to Geoff that he was in charge of a lot of children without the authority which would have held them in check if they were children.

To his surprise Cary's face paled. "I've got to have it," he announced. "Fifty dollars of it, any way. It's for—see, it's for—all money!"

Geoff's knees doubled under him and he sat down on the bed. "All money! A kid like you?" "Been married and divorced for two years," Cary informed him gloomily. "You see, Cynthia was away at college—"

"I'll bet she was," Geoff said grimly. "How any of you kept out of jail while she was away is more than I know! Let's hear the worst!"

"It can be put in scenario form. Wild party. Boy and girl out for a lark. Secret marriage. Old folks raising Cain. Divorce—and me stuck for fifty a month alimony."

"And have you paid it regularly? Or perhaps I should put it," Geoff continued with sarcasm, "has it been paid regularly?"

back to her. This was how she had felt then: after dear to her fingertips but held to her by the gay generosity of the giver. Geoff had a passionate desire to dash out to the hospital and go down on his knees to apologize to Cynthia.

"Don't mention it," Cary said. "I had something left of your hundred and with pay day coming next Saturday I could afford to let myself go a little."

Just before he crawled into bed that night, Geoff made an emphatic promise to himself. "When that girl comes home I'm going to treat her so handsomely she'll think I've experienced religion, or something!"

CHAPTER VII

Cynthia Thinks.

DOCTOR BIGHAM had told Cynthia that morning that she might go home in a few days. "To go home! Usually those words mean to a hospital patient a foretaste of heaven. If I could just go home!"

But Cynthia was the exception to the rule. She clung to each day in the hospital as though it were a refuge from danger. She dreaded to go home, dreaded indescribably to take up her life again. She longed to prolong her convalescence indefinitely, safe from Marquerite's notebook and pencil, from the monthly struggle with bills, from important decisions to be made at the Odds and Ends.

So many worries awaited her at home! Cary and his alimony and his talent for getting and losing jobs, the girl in whose company he had been seen so often of late; Miss Nona whose innocent inroads on the monthly income played havoc with Cynthia's plans; the Cap'n who believed that smoking did not hurt him because he wanted to believe it.

She had a hazy recollection of having turned over her job to Geoff; of making him promise to pay all expenses out of her own money; but it was a recollection she had pushed down every time it showed signs of coming to the top of her mind.

Cynthia withdrew as she realized that by now Geoff knew all the disconcerting secrets she had worked so desperately to conceal from him.

"He's probably sold all the family skeletons to a medical college for what they would bring," she told herself. "Oh, why did he have to come out to Denver this year? And why did I have to fall ill?" She hid her face in the pillow.

There came to her the memory of the day she left college. She had been so happy there! It had been a dream to which she had looked forward for years. Dad and she had talked college since she was twelve. Two perfect years of it, the beginning of a third—and then had come Cary's letter. That letter had changed Cynthia overnight from a girl whose only concern with money had been to see that she had plenty of it in her purse when she went to New York for her vacations into a woman racked with financial anxieties.

She remembered yet that terrible journey across half the continent. She had wept for her lost college years and for her family, alternately. She blamed herself bitterly. She had known what Cary was: charming and loving and lovable but as little to be relied upon as a weather-vane. And Miss Nona was like a child when it came to handling money.

She found things even worse than she had feared. Miss Nona had ample credit in the city and she had drawn upon it to the limit.

There had been something like a family row when Cynthia had devalued on the gift shop. Miss Nona's idea was that Cynthia should use the money her father had left her to pay off these worrying bills. It was so unpleasant having people call about them! The Captain's idea was similar to that.

Cynthia had pointed out patiently that if she used her money to pay the bills there would be nothing for them to live on. She had rented the little shop, naming it the Odds and Ends in a moment of grim discouragement. It seemed to her that was all that was left to her of the beautiful life she had planned for herself; just odds and ends of courage and happiness and ambition and the will to carry on.

The store prospered. Little by little she had begun to pay off that staggering debt. Then Tenny came—but

Mr. Montague, though belonging to Miss Nona's generation, had no nonsensical ideas about wholesale hospitality. He sent a check with businesslike regularity each month and Cynthia soothed her conscience by the realization that very nearly all of it was spent on Tenny, after all.

"It'll all be to do over again," she thought, tossing restlessly on her pillow.

Once released the worries began to swarm about her like buzzing gnats. The biggest gnat, the one that stung as well as buzzed, was called Geoff Ensloe.

"What must Geoff think of us by this time!"

When Miss Nona came the next afternoon she handed Cynthia a square gray envelope.

"From that New York man," she said, smiling. "I thought you two had stopped writing to each other."

"So we had," Cynthia answered composedly. "Perhaps he's going to be married again and this is an announcement."

She read Ben Sutton's letter, not once but several times. At last she laid it down and spoke to her mother somewhat thoughtfully.

"Ben wants—can you guess what he wants, Miss Nona?"

"To marry you, I suppose!" Cynthia fingered the gray envelope. "It amounts to that, I suppose. You know I refused him when I was in college?"

"You told me, I don't wonder. A widower with a boy eight years old and you only twenty-two! But go on, dear! What does he say?"

"He wants to come out here," Cynthia answered slowly. "He says he needs a vacation, and he's never been in Denver. I'll read the letter to you."

"He sounds like a charming person," Miss Nona commented after the reading.

"He's—nice," Cynthia selected the words after some hesitation. "Young-looking, with nice gray eyes, and just a touch of gray at his temples. He has money—lots of it. You'd like to go East to live, Miss Nona?"

Her mother patted her and benedictly. "I'd like whatever makes you happy, my little girl. Don't worry this Mister—Mister—"

"Sutton."

"Yes. This Mr. Sutton, unless you love him, Cynthia. That's the only important thing—that you should love the man you marry. That's all that matters."

"I could be happy enough with him," the girl said. "Cary would be looked after—Ben Sutton would know how to bring out the best in him. You and the Captain would be comfortable for life. It's a temptation, Miss Nona!"

"Not one of those flimsy matters, dear, unless you love him." She rose and bent to kiss her daughter. "I must go now. Darling, in a few days you'll be home with us! Isn't that wonderful!"

After her early supper and before she fell asleep Cynthia thought a great deal about Ben Sutton. All he asked was to be allowed to come to see her. His visit would commit her to nothing. But how blessed the relief of dropping on to his broad shoulders the heavy load she carried!

In addition to the warm liking she had always had for him, there was now the glamour of his great wealth. Money meant everything in the world to her now, she thought.

"Cary!" she whispered to herself. "I could get him away from that silly-looking girl he's going about with. Miss Nona now she would love having a lot of money again! Tenny—I would insist on having Tenny with me!" She smiled at the somewhat varied fancy with which she would present her suit if she decided to accept him.

"It will be two weeks before I can go back to the shop," she reflected. "I'll write Ben to come on at once, so I can have some time to show him the city. I'll remind him that I'm not committing myself to anything."

She fell asleep.

CHAPTER VIII

Geoff Falls in Love.

CYNTHIA was coming home! The Cary house hummed with preparation for her arrival. Geoff had preparations of his own to make. The first was the prideful arrangement of a small pile of receipts bills. He positively swelled with triumph every time he looked at those bills. Not Cynthia herself could have done better, he thought. He considered that if anybody ever deserved the commendation; "Well done, thou good and faithful servant!" he did.

He hurried home from the laboratory that night. In response to his eager question Miss Nona told him he might go up and see Cynthia.

She lay on the old chaise longue which had belonged to her grandmother. She wore a silk and lace negligee. Her hair was tied back with a ribbon, giving her a little-girl look which touched him inexpressibly. Her blue eyes were fixed on something he could not see.

Something happened to Geoff while he stood there gazing at her. He had experienced many emotions where Cynthia was concerned: disapproval, resentment, downright dislike; then dismay, remorse, ardent admiration for her courage and cleverness. Now all these feelings were swept away, or rather were mingled into a love which shook him by its intensity.

What a little girl she was to carry so many burdens! Wrath against her family who permitted this sacrifice filled him; was succeeded by humble gratitude that he could lift those burdens; slipped in turn into a love and longing that must have reached Cynthia, for she turned her head and saw him; and smiled.

He crossed the room a few steps; took one of her hands in both of his and said gently.

"Grand to have you home!"

"Grand to be home again," she answered politely.

Stupid, banal talk! Underneath it her heart was asking an agonized question: "Do you utterly despise us, now that you've learned all our horrid secrets?" And his heart was saying: "Darling! Sweet heart! I love you better than all the world!"

Cynthia broke the silence abruptly. "About the house-hold bills, Geoff—"

He shook his head. "You're not to talk business today."

"What's the use of putting it off?" she demanded. "I'd rather know the worst at once so I could begin to plan."

Indignation seized him. "What do you mean the worst? There's no worst about it. Every bill is paid."

"Then you did pay them out of your own money?"

"I did no such thing!" He rose and stood towering above her. "Didn't you ask me to promise not to and didn't I promise?"

In spite of his new tenderness for Cynthia, in spite of the fact that he knew for the first time what love meant, the old faint hostility was rising between them. When Cynthia's weakness pulled at his heartstrings, when he would gladly have rushed out and died to save her pain, he was snapping at her in exactly the old quarrelsome way.

Nor had illness quenched Cynthia's smoldering ill-humor.

"Are you trying to tell me that you—have run this house?"

"I most certainly have!" He slapped the little pile of bills down before her. "Grocery bill, receipt in full; milk, eggs, Tenny's coat, ditto."

She fingered the rubber band that held the receipts. "I'm afraid to look at these. I can't believe you've done all that without without—"

"I give you my word I haven't spent a dollar of my own money," he assured her. "It's all come out of your own funds. It's been an education to me—learning the prices of things."

"So valuable to a chemical engineer," she taunted him.

"Why not? Cooking, as I see it, is, after all, a wholly chemical process. Take, for instance," he began in an oratorical tone, "the effect of heat on vitamins. In cooking to-matoes—"

EXCLUSIVE USE OF CAMP SITES BARRIED IN WHITE MOUNTAIN NATIONAL FOREST

The long established policy prohibiting lease of camp or summer home sites in White Mountain National Forest will not be changed, said Forest Supervisor James E. Scott in an announcement from his office at Laconia Monday.

During recent months, according to the Forest Supervisor, there has been considerable advocacy of the proposal that individuals and small groups should be allowed to lease choice sites throughout the National Forest and construct summer homes and summer camps for their exclusive enjoyment. While it is apparent that some additional lease choice sites throughout the National Forest revenues might be derived from such leases, Major R. Y. Stuart, Chief Forester of the United States, after a new study of the problem has reiterated the local Forest Service policy prohibiting such occupancy of National Forest lands.

White Mountain National Forest is one of the most extensively utilized public recreation areas in the United States. Both summer and winter visitation grow steadily. With a look ahead to ultimate demands of the general public for camping spaces and with a view to preserving as fully as possible the natural beauty of the National Forest it is held that the choice sites which would be most in demand for exclusive use must be kept unencumbered and the area as a whole must be kept free of the miscellany of scattered camp construction.

The public are of course most cordially welcome, said Supervisor Scott, to visit this National Forest, to camp at will and stay as long as one may wish. Numerous public camping areas in the Forest have been improved to meet such needs and additional improvements of this sort are continually underway.

After the ceremony a delicious dinner was served to their relatives and friends in a private garden beautifully decorated with cut flowers and ferns. From there the bridal party motored to Brooklyn and after a few hours of gaiety on board the German liner, S. S. Bremen, the newlyweds were left with hosts of good wishes for a safe and happy voyage to France and Germany where they will spend their honeymoon.

They will be at home at 18 Fifth Street, Attleboro, Mass., after September 15.
